The Fund gained 2.78% in November, ending at a new high of €19.21 on the 28th of November. This performance reversed the modest losses incurred in September and October and marked an outperformance of European and global indices.

The top contributor was Youngone, the specialist textile and bike manufacturer we introduced in our third quarter letter this year. Their third quarter results surprised the market positively, with the OEM division growing strongly despite tariff headwinds, with growth at key customer Arc'teryx likely helping. The losses at SCOTT, their bike division, narrowed and its bloated inventory declined. Watches of Switzerland Group performed strongly on news Switzerland finally managed to negotiate their tariff rate downwards from 39% to 15%, which should help the Swiss watchmakers' US sales. Converge ICT, a Filipino fibre company, performed well after their profit warning this summer sent the shares plummeting. This allowed us the opportunity to purchase the shares at a significant discount to our estimate of intrinsic value. We believe there are good reasons for the current high churn rate and cost inflation to be temporary and think they are still growing strongly despite these headwinds. The shares have a very attractive valuation at current levels, in our view.

The largest detractor was our small stake in Vivendi. Shares fell as the French high court overturned an earlier ruling and returned the case to a lower court with a more limited scope. This could mean Bolloré will not have to make a mandatory offer for the company. The shares trade at a 50% discount to their very easily determinable net asset value and we believe Bolloré has plans to continue simplifying his group structure, which should eventually release massive value. M. Dias Branco reported softer-than-anticipated results with volumes inline, but pricing weaker due to a weaker mix. Raw material prices also did not fall as quickly as anticipated, which together with the pricing led to lower margins. Brightstar Lottery reported positive third quarter results for both sales and EBITDA while also introducing its mid-term outlook, which implies 6% annualised EBITDA growth and improved cash generation over the next three years. Like many mid-term plans, it is skewed towards the later years as 2026 still has huge payments for the Italian lottery renewal. We believe once the market starts to focus on 2027 and normalized free cash flow the shares should re-rate.
