The fund gained 6.9% in April, ending at $10.53 on the 30th of April, slightly below the all-time high of $10.76 on April 17th. This appears to be a slight underperformance of European and global benchmarks. Following the drawdown in March, global equity markets rebounded strongly in April. A two-week ceasefire between the U.S. and Iran provided temporary relief. However, by mid-month, diplomatic efforts faced setbacks, with the Strait of Hormuz still effectively closed. Wall Street nevertheless surged to all-time highs. This seems due to the removal of tail risks, lower volatility in energy prices after the initial March shock, and a positive AI narrative which followed earnings beats from semiconductor and hyperscaler plays. Meanwhile, the real economy saw growth forecasts revised downwards due to the ongoing energy shock and trade disruptions. Market breadth has narrowed to levels not seen since the dot-com era. Anchoring a portfolio in a handful of mega-cap names creates concentration risk that we will always avoid. We are not ignoring innovation; we are simply refusing to pay a premium for speculation. Our companies are so far showing largely resilient earnings and steady cash flows and delivering on our expectations. We are optimistic on the portfolio as the AI rally matures and investors might begin value hunting for companies with tangible earnings and attractive pricing.

Vitrocell (+60%) continued its strong performance in April. As highlighted in our first quarter letter, primary batteries serve critical applications in both defence and oil & gas sectors. We are excited by the possibility of supplying special batteries to the US military. Caltagirone was the second biggest contributor, with a 14% performance in April. Market sentiment was buoyed by billionaire Francesco Gaetano Caltagirone's aggressive moves in the Italian banking sector including the governance battle at Monte dei Paschi di Siena, where he increased his stake to over 11%. Compagnie de l'Odet performed well, driven by the announcement of a massive €4.2 billion exceptional dividend from its 71% owned subsidiary, Bolloré SE. Odet indicated it would pass on a significant portion of this to its own shareholders. Also noteworthy was Pershing Square Capital Management's submission of a non-binding proposal to acquire (some of) UMG on April 7th. We believe the proposal is interesting, even if we think it has more to do with financial engineering than with UMG's operations. At the very least, it highlights UMG's undervaluation. UMG's board has yet to respond to the proposal, but with its Q1 results it doubled the size of its share buyback authorization to €1bn and authorized the sale of half its stake in Spotify.

The top detractor was Jardine Matheson, due to short-term headwinds in some of its subsidiaries (primarily PT Astra International). The share price took a breather after a sequence of positive earnings and capital allocation announcements. It remains a deeply undervalued, well-capitalized conglomerate and a premier proxy for economic growth in South East Asia. Norma was another meaningful detractor as it concluded its share buyback offer, repurchasing 10% of its shares at €16.59 or €52.8 million of the planned €260 million capital return post the sale of the Water Management business. Following removal of the tender, shareholders refocused on the challenging conditions in its auto and industrial end markets.
